Anthenticity of Love Notes to Hotel Man Admitted by Woman's Counsel.

MEANT AS LOYALTY TEST

Lawyers' Arguments Bristle With Attacks on Railway Official and His Spouse.

Special Despatch to Tax Dux. PITTSPIELD, Mass., Sept. 28. - Judge Edward T. Slocum, sitting in the Probate Court, handed down an immediate decision this afternoon in the case of Charles Mellen, after hearing the arguments of the counsel. delien's counsel to the Supreme Court of

An amazing part of the argument of Mrs. Mellen's counsel was his admission that the so-called "Kitten" letters were en by her for the purpose of testing Mellen's affections. He said that letters were to have been placed in Mellen's hands, but that instead the nediary sold the letters and that

Mr. Warner began by declaring that e publication of the Brown letters was real motive of Mr. Mellen's suit. He and the reading was staged by Mr. Mel-ion's attorney, who had read them with the skill of an actor. The plaintiff had found pleasure and amusement in hearing the letters read, while they made hearts bleed and damaged reputations. He said it was most significant that Mr Mellen kept the letters locked in his safe in Stockbridge during the time there was a suit for the allenation of Brown's affections pending against Mrs. Mellen.

Mr. Mellen had testified that the let-Warner contended that it was this hitterness and a spirit of vindictiveness that had impelled Mellen to begin the present action. He argued it was sigificant that when the letters were dein March, 1918, to Mrs. Brown's s trying to brand his own wife and dren by the publication of the letters, Warner argued, for a man of noble haracter would have bought the evi-Mr. Warner said that all through the latters there was indicated the desire to aid and comfort Mellen. Counsel asserted that the letters did not show that any illicit relations had existed between Brown and Mrs. Mellen. He referred especially to a letter in which had been written that she had fallen and was proud that she had fallen to Brown. Mr. Warner said that the words had a double meaning and that in the best of society one might the words had a double meaning and not preclude the use of existing manu-that in the best of society one might factured stocks provided the metal can-ask another with regard to the likelihood not be utilized for more essential war between husband and wife. This fric-tion in the home led her to make a test of her husband's love. Did he love ther? Could she arouse his isolousy? her? Could she arouse his jealousy? To make such a test she singled out a man like Brown, who was known to both and had been on pleasant relations with them. The letters are prepared and put into the hands of "The Blonde" she is to telephone to Mr. Mellen and arrange for the delivery of the letters. There the plan falls. The letters instead of being delivered to Mr. Mellen are sold.

In closing Mr. Warner pilloried Mr. Mellen, likening him to a painting in the Frederick Wilhelm gallery in Ber-lin entitled: "Ambition and Greed and Love of Money Crushing Affection."
"An iron cross of Potsdam should be conferred upon such a man," Mr. Warner declared.

John W. Crim in summing up said: "Now let us see whether Mrs. Mellen conceived the idea of testing the love and affection of twenty-odd years with a clerk in a hotel in New York by the standards of the White Light district of standards of the White Light district of New York, or whether she had lost her bearing in so far as the sanctity of her liome was concerned; testing his affection by allowing servants of her house to become demoralized, the little children running through the streets with me one to guide them, with an attempt to crush a man with something a child could kill a giant with (Mr. Crim held up the solid marble darning egg), while under the influence of strong drink; testing his affections, I say solemnly that it requires courage to walk into a court-room in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and offer such hypothesis as an explanation of these letters which speak

Tells of Neglect of Home.

"She must have started her relations with this man in 1912, for your Honor will recall that in July, 1913, she wrote hat she was proud that she had "fallen" for Brown," he said. "In those letters your Honor will see all the gradations of a woman jealous, angry, driven by an irresistible love and affection for that man to neglect her home.

"And she asks Brown to advise her with regard to Mr. Mellen's work in conmection with the New Haven Railroad." he continued. "I doubt if in the history of your county a more brazen piece of treachery was ever discovered on the bart of a woman. Testing his affections! You have the best part of me, my heart." Judge Slocum said: "It seems to me that with the evidence before me, and the respondent in this case not having presented a single item of evidence to contradict that evidence, I cannot find otherwise than for the petitioner to ritte case, that Katherine L.
